Goes Against Precedent.

The feature of Mr. Wilson's proposed move that interested Democrats most was the contradictory attitude in which will put the new Democratic President in regard to Thomas Jefferson, th father of Democracy. President Jefferson discontinued the custom because it seemed a needless waste of time and because there would be a resulting benefit to public affairs. Mr. Wilson apparently thinks otherwise. It has been said that Thomas Jefferson's real reason for discontinuing the custom of addressing Congress was that he disliked the idea of speaking and of being questioned by members of Congress.

Washington and Adams discussed matters openly with Congress; but there has been no intimation that President Wilson will be questioned by any member on Tuesday.

Members of Congress hardly knew what to say to-night. It is apparent, however, that some of them are inclined to couple this innovation with the President's recent activity in fram-ing the tariff bill and to argue that it indicates too ready a disposition on his part to participate in the affairs of the legislative branch of the Government.

When he was Governor of New Jersey Mr. Wilson showed he did not intend to be bound by precedents when he believed they were unwise. He actor dressed the New Jersey Legislature

Dean Grosvenor of the Cathedrai of St. John the Divine and the Rev. Dr. Leighton . Both clergymen expressed strong opposition to the movement. Dean Grosvenor said:

There are many reasons that might be given, but speaking for myself there is one controlling reason and that briefly is this, that to drop the word 'Protestant' would seem to proclaim that we were try-ing to get rid of the great principles of Protestantism, as those principles were in-

into the new learning, the marvellous spirit of adventure and the wide outlook toward truth for which that great epoch stood. It was the age of intellectual, of the discovery of America, of the art of printing, of a new science and philosophy.
